

10 Why does the pressure of a fixed mass of gas at constant volume increase with temperature?

- A The molecules collide with the container walls more frequently.
- B The number of intermolecular collisions increases.
- C The molecules travel greater distances between collisions with one another.
- D The energy transferred to the walls during collisions increases.