

S/N	Answer	Suggested Solutions
1	D	1st measurement is recorded to a different precision. The measurements vary above and below the average value, hence random errors may be present. The calculated value of acceleration is close to actual value of 9.81 m s^{-2}, hence accurate.
2	A	With constant acceleration while there is fuel, the rocket gains velocity at a constant rate.