

Answer: D

- 11 Latent heat is absorbed when temperature is constant (changing of state). Assuming that the electric heater power is constant, the longer the time taken to change the state (region S than region Q) means more energy is required. Hence specific latent heat of vaporisation is larger.

Answer: B

- 12 Using $pV = nRT$, product of pV is proportional to T for fixed mass of gas